My view of the question as to whether freezing injures seed corn is, if the corn is dry on the stalk in the hank, it is immaterial whether it is gathered before frost or exposed to 20° below zero. The germ is not injured by frost when it has fully matured before cold weather sets in; but, on the other hand if the auromer recessor has been void.

if the summer season has been cold and backward, and the corn not wholly dried in its husk, a cold unap on it will destroy its vitality. If gathered and hung up in a dry place, it may be saved and left to ripen on the cob.— Much corn is spoiled for seed in large cribs, where it heats, and the germ killed thereby. It is seldom safe to get seed from the middle of the crib. If a farmer is so unfortunate as to have to resort to the crib for seed corn, he should get it within six or eight inches from the side that has been least expos-
